Is Kinshasa still a grand project?

With the exception of a few initiatives like Kin Elenda, which provides a partial response to urban needs, most of the announced grand projects remain just grand announcements. The chaotic urbanization of Kinshasa continues, with no adapted infrastructure, no structured mobility plan, and no clear vision for the future.

What is Kinshasa known for?

Kinshasa, formerly named Léopoldville until 30 June 1966, is the capital and largest city of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Once a site of fishing and trading villages along the Congo River, Kinshasa is now one of the world's fastest-growing megacities. Kinshasa's 2024 population was estimated at 17,032,322.

What is the Kinshasa urban transport master plan (pdtk)?

The Kinshasa Urban Transport Master Plan (PDTK): A Theoretical Framework with No Visible Impact? Adopted in 2019 with the support of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA), the PDTK was designed to structure urban mobility with solutions adapted to the city's exponential population growth. The strategic priorities included:

Does Kinshasa need a master plan?

Kinshasa remains paralyzed by unbearable traffic congestion, where taxis (ketch) and motorcycle taxis (wewa) dominate the streets. No real progress on the BRT, nor on the urban railway infrastructure. A master plan is just a document unless it is translated into concrete action.
